Kim Dovey : Framing Places: Mediating Power in Built Form (Architext) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Framing Places: Mediating Power in Built Form (Architext):

0 of 4 people found the following review helpful. Great Process!! Highly Recommended!!By fuzepopI received the book in a timely fashion in the condition described. My only concern was the shipping from location, which was not provided so it was difficult to gauge the receipt of the book. But overall process was problem free and great product!!

Framing Places is an account of the nexus between place and power, investigating how the built forms of architecture and urban design act as mediators of social practices of power. Explored through a range of theories and case studies, this examination shows how lives are 'framed' within the clusters of rooms, buildings, streets and cities. These silent framings of everyday life also mediate practices of coercion, seduction and authorization as architects and urban designers engage with the articulation of dreams; imagining and constructing a 'better' future in someone's interest. This second edition has been thoroughly revised and updated to include a look at the recent Grollo Tower development in Melbourne and a critique on Euralille, a new quarter development in Northern France. The book draws from a broad range of methodology including: analysis of spatial structure discourse analysis phenomenology. These approaches are woven together through a series of narratives on specific cities - Berlin, Beijing and Bangkok - and global building types including the corporate tower, shopping mall, domestic house and enclave.

About the Author Kim Dovey is Professor of Architecture and Urban Design at the University of Melbourne. He has published and broadcast widely on issues of place and ideology including the book Fluid City (Routledge 2005).
